Changes to Otago scholarship process:

Since 2019, students no longer select the specific scholarship they wish to apply for by ticking a box. Instead, they have to answer a series of questions that will filter down to the best scholarship fit for the maximum amount of money, based on both the information that they provide online and that has been compiled during the application assessment process.

Students will be asked if they wish to be considered for scholarships with specific attributes and asked further questions and/or examples/statements on subjects such as:

- leadership experience and potential (both in and out of the school environment) extracurricular activities
- sport or cultural activities
- taha Māori or indigenous Pacific Island community involvement
- financial and family circumstances etc
- All applications are completed via eVision and students are required to go through the first few steps of enrolment at the University of Otago before the 'Apply Now' button is visible. This includes selecting an undergraduate programme of study. They can select any programme to get the application underway and change this at a later date
